... created.

A noteworthy example of the buyer-bidding auction model is the system operated by PriceLine . com and described in U.S. Pat. No. 5,794,207 issued to Walker et al. In this system, a potential buyer competes with other potential buyers for airline tickets by submitting a bid for an airline ticket on the PriceLine website. An airline can choose to accept a bid , thereby committing the buyer to buy the ticket.

Abstract (Basic): EP 1054227 A2

NOVELTY - The hose connector is also deformed at its end against the wall of the tank to prevent its withdrawal from the tank.

USE - The invention is for use on a tank assembly for a heat exchanger, and incorporates a method of assembly.

ADVANTAGE - The invention assures a correct insertion of a hose connection into an opening of a tank wall prior to brazing and the formation of a leak tight joint.

Gum rubber sheets used during retreading of tyres - consisting of gum rubber sheet and polyethylene based polymeric film adhered to one side

Abstract (Basic): AU 695289 B

A composite article comprising a gum rubber sheet and a polyethylene based polymeric film removably adhered to at least one side so that the gum rubber sheet is prevented from sticking to itself. Also claimed is the film-covered gum rubber sheet in the form of a roll with the polymeric film separating the rubber sheet from itself.

USE - The gum rubber sheets are used during the retreading of tyres by building up thin layers of rubber (gum squeegee) by winding onto the tyre to be retreaded.

ADVANTAGE - The removable polymeric release film on the thin gum rubber sheets facilitates handling of the sheets during the procedure of winding the sheet onto the tyre during then retreading operation. The films are easily removed from the rubber sheet when required, and obviate the need for special tools to part the layers of rubber for winding onto the tyre to be retreaded.

A discussion of online bidding and dynamic pricing activities looks at the Web as a 'dynamic marketplace in which prices are more fluid than ever.' Online bidding continues to expand and become more popular, as shown by the broad-based success of companies such as eBay and Priceline . com . Buyers and sellers can haggle over all types of consumer, business, farming, and industrial equipment and supplies. A spokesperson for Visteon, the parts subsidiary of Ford Motor Company, says the firm held a reverse auction to source $150 million in circuit boards and other automotive parts. Visteon plans to solicit bids from suppliers for an additional $350 million in multi-year contracts. Dave Vent, CIO of Visteon, explains that bargaining with multiple suppliers can take months, but the same tasks can be done via the Internet in just hours. Analysts expect online bidding to become as universally used as stock quotes and free e-mail, and it should significantly change the way in which products move through the supply chain. Buyers and sellers interface directly and more often to determine the worth of an item at a specific point in time. Two forms of online bidding are described: auctions and exchanges .

Thanks to the Web, there are great deals and bargains to be found like at Priceline . com or YouPrice.com, where users can make bids on cars, airline tickets, computers, and other things, and these two sites will scour the Web looking for takers. Onsale at Auction, eBay, and Surplus Auction by Egghead are online auctions that will auction just about anything as long as it is legal. There are Web calendars like AnyDay and Yahoo! Calendar for individuals or workgroups. Jfax.com, eFax, and FaxWave are free online fax services. MySimon, BottomDollar, and Price Watch are search services that help users find the lowest prices when shopping for just about anything . There are several companies that offer free hardware such as Free-PC, Encanto Networks, and The Simple Solution.

Priceline . com is an online service that has developed a proprietary e-commerce system allowing visitors to input the highest price they are willing to pay for products and services. Vendors try to match user bids for airline tickets, cars, mortgages, and hotel rooms, and the company plans to add credit card services and other categories to the wildly successful launch of offered services and goods. Though Priceline . com has an uphill battle ahead in competing with markets that contain buyers and sellers matching prices via complex financial rules and interactions, many users experience great deals already. One example is a user who found a $50 hotel room at an expensive San Francisco hotel that would normally go for over $100 per night. In the area of bidding on credit cards and loans online, the advantage with Priceline . com could only be in favor of borrowers who know the going rate for the loan they are seeking, otherwise users may quote a price they are willing to pay which is actually higher than what is available.

Six travel-related online Web site services are reviewed here, including Biztravel.com, Internet Travel Network, Microsoft's Microsoft Expedia, Preview Travel, and Priceline . com . Biztravel.com is this magazine's best choice for business-related online services, with excellent travel-profile features and comprehensive tracking, though the service is a bit slow. Internet Travel Network is another great business-related travel service, with an intuitive interface and ease-of-use features that anyone can use. MSN Expedia is another 'Editor's Choice' that now features an updated user interface and other information pertinent to the business traveler. Preview Travel is an equal parts business and pleasure site, with numerous dramatic improvements over the previous version. Priceline . com allows users to name their own prices, essentially bidding on airline tickets; however, the premium is often flexibility when using this service.

Online commerce rules and new services, like MetalExchange and Priceline . com , are changing the way companies protect information and do business with one another. MetalExchange was launched by a group that includes LTV Steel, Steel Dynamics, and Weirton Steel in order to create one-to-one steel sales transactions and auctions and sell off an industry-wide surplus of flat-roll steel. Some steel companies have recently shut down the commerce side of excess steel sales altogether and moved their buyers to MetalExchange. Steel sellers must pay $150,000 to MetalExchange and give a 2 percent cut on all sales, but accessing the service for buyers is free. Priceline . com is a radical business-to-commerce Web venture that since April 1998 has already sold over 50,000 airline tickets via ticket auctions. Priceline's buyer-dictated pricing and upcoming travel package bidding availability is changing the way airline and travel business is being conducted.

ABSTRACT: The Internet ticketing service, priceline . com , is testing a new approach to airline ticket sales. The service, which operates through Priceline Travel, an agency based at Stamford, Connecticut, offers customers the chance to bid on an airline ticket for a designated day of travel, but it is also requiring of customers that they make a "conditional purchase offer" on the ticket, explains a Priceline consultant. The writer explains how the system works.

Discusses the Internet's ability to make pricing information available anywhere, to anyone, and at any time. Says that the fervor for online bidding, as exemplified by the success of eBay and Priceline . com ., is extending beyond antiques and concert tickets to certificates of deposits and tractors. Cites two basic forms of online bidding : auctions and exchanges . Says Visteon, a division of Ford Motor, held a reverse auction to source $150 million in circuit boards and automotive components. Says eventually online bidding may be as ubiquitous as stock quotes and free e-mail. Cites Brian Marshall, CIO of Westell Technologies, "The Internet has taken the free market, the notion of supply and demand, and compressed it. Static pricing will become a thing of the past.'" Includes survey results of auction site visitors: dealers, resellers, end users, distributors, brokers, liquidators, and manufacturers. Includes two photos, one graph, one chart and one sidebar. TAYLOR & JEROME column examines the phenomenon of the reinvention of the middleman on the Internet. Defines middlemen as those who provide a service, and cites a number of examples demonstrating how the niche continues to be profitable. Says some online middlemen are reinventing the concept of retail sales by matching buyers and sellers and never actually handling any merchandise themselves. Spotlights priceline . com , which matches buyers' bids for cars and airline tickets with willing sellers, and Ebay, which brings buyers and sellers together at online auctions. Adds that search engines have also become middlemen, selling key listing placements, and notes that other companies make money by streamlining services for consumers, including securing home loans and titles, insurance, or even the guaranteed lowest available price for specific consumer goods. Priceline . com , the online retailer that allows consumers to bid for phone services, airline tickets, petrol and other products, is to be investigated by the Connecticut Attorney General following a high level of customer complaints. The Attorney General's office has received over 100 complaints since mid-2000, raising doubts over whether the retailer gave full and accurate information about product terms, prices and conditions. Meanwhile, Priceline has also had its membership of the Better Business Bureau cancelled for failing to eliminate the cause of complaints, although Priceline denies it has acted wrongly, saying it has taken care to educate customers about how its system works.

Priceline to Let Customers Bid for Long-Distance

US: NEW PHONE SERVICE FROM PRICELINE
Wall Street Journal Europe (WSJ) 08 Nov 1999 p.5
Language: ENGLISH

A long-distance telecoms service is being launched by Priceline . com, the Internet company which allows users to bid for hotel rooms and airline tickets. Customers of the new service will place bids for blocks of minutes for domestic and international calls, and successful bidders will then be able to use their minutes at any time using a special identification number. The first carrier to provide air time is Net2Phone, which uses Internet technology for transmission to standard phones.

Priceline: The Real Story

In its few short months, Priceline has gained incredible press as the a great source for cheap airline tickets.

For those of you who are not familiar with Priceline.com, it is a buying service for leisure airline tickets that lets you name your price. In order to use the service, you must register with your travel dates, destination, credit card information and the price that you are willing to pay.

Within one hour, Priceline will tell you if they found an airline that will meet your price. If they find flights within your specifications, they will use your credit card to purchase the ticket. Initially, it sounded like a great idea, airlines could fill unsold seats with bids from travelers. Airlines could gain extra revenue and consumers could save a bundle.

However, we have some major problems with the system:

- Priceline is rather inflexible on travel times. You must be willing to travel between 6AM and 10PM on the days you select with the possibility of a two hour layover. You do not have the option of rejecting the flights if Priceline.com meets your price.

- You do not collect frequent flyer miles.
- There are no refunds on tickets or changes to your itinerary allowed.
- Priceline strongly recommends that you enter a price above the airlines lowest published advanced economy ticket. From this statement, we gather that Priceline cannot get you really cheap tickets.
- Tax is not included. Under normal circumstances, airfare is always quoted with tax. At Priceline, they add tax to your bid price.

We have read some relatively negative reports on Priceline. Business Week reported (June 1, 1998) that Priceline has deals to get unpublished fares with only two domestic airlines, TWA and America West. (And with TWA, you can already save 20% on most fares by using LowestFare.com.) After reading their site, we had assumed that they worked with most major airlines. After learning they only had a couple of unpublished fare deals, we figured that they act more like a discount travel agent than an auction service. Although a travel agent passes all the savings onto you. If you enter an incorrect bid, Priceline gets to make additional money.
